Although first published at the end of August, I only recently got a chance to read the article "The Silent Oil Crisis" by James Howard of the UK peak oil website PowerSwitch. The article is only a brief summary of the situations found in different (mostly third world) countries around the world, but it does bring to the forefront the stark difference between the freewheeling atmosphere found especially in the US and the rationing and shortages found elsewhere in the world.

The article only scratches the surface, but it's worth a read, I think.
