

Natural Gas and Credit Situation - Nate Hagens Interview on Global Public Media

Posted by Gail the Actuary on January 6, 2009 - 8:06pm

Topic: Economics/Finance

Tags: natural gas [list all tags]

Nate's interview on the Reality Report from December 29 is now available from Global Public Media. I think it is very good. According to the write-up:

In this edition of The Reality Report host Jason Bradford interviews Nate Hagens. In a show broadcast over a year ago Nate described the financial deleveraging process and how this could lead to commodity deflation, including "$50 oil."

Topics in this program highlight how the current financial melt down and impact the timing and severity of peak oil and natural gas--including the dreaded "natural gas cliff" as rigs go idle due to low prices. We discuss whether this means economic growth now over, and if so, how should societies adjust?

This is a link to the site where you can download or stream the talk. It is about 50 minutes long. (Per Jason: If you could ask TOD readers for help with GPM transcription services that would be handy. If interested/able they can contact laurel@postcarbon.org)

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 3.0 United States License.